Market outlook

Stock market: VN-Index opened the morning session with a green color and momentum still came from the Banking group. The market closed the morning session with a total trading value of both exchanges decreasing compared to the previous session, with all Banking codes gradually falling towards the end of the session, indicating that the buying force is weakening. At the end of the session, VN-Index reached 1,162.22 points, up 0.06% or 0.68 points compared to the previous trading session. The market breadth tilted towards the positive side with 12/18 sectors gaining points, led by the Petroleum and Insurance sector. Conversely, the Media and Chemical sectors led the decline. Foreign investors net bought on HSX and net sold on HNX today. Currently, VN-Index continues to consolidate above the 1,160 point threshold, however, signs of liquidity weakness along with profit-taking pressure may cause VN-Index to have some fluctuations here.

Futures contracts: Futures contracts increased following the movement of VN30 except future contracts F2402. It is recommended that investors trade cautiously during the session.

Covered warrants: In the trading session on January 11, 2024, covered warrants fluctuated along with the struggling movement of the underlying stocks.
